

AS Customer Services

Monday, 23 August 2010

Let's see...the message originates from Mexico. The Web link points to a domain owned by someone in Geneva, Switzerland. The job would have sounded real if they hadn't started by telling you that you'd be spending someone else's money. If you keep that in mind while you read the rest of the message, it starts to feel pretty slimy.

The job pays a base salary plus commission. The duties involve preparation, issuance, and handling of purchase orders, as well as delivery of purchases. We wonder if it also involves stolen credit and debit card information, or the sending of packages via FedEx, UPS or USPS.

After you get through reading this message, keep in mind one thing: the person who sent this appears to be in Mexico while the domain is in Switzerland. If the company is legitimate, why wouldn't they hire people in their own country? And supposing this was legitimate, which we don't think it is, are you REALLY the person to launch and manage their American operations? Just sayin'!
